

HUNDREDS SHOP IN TINLEY PARK IN COMMUNITY BUY AT HOME CAMPAIGN

That advertising and good merchandise pays was fully demonstrated last week in Tinley Park when the business men of that town put on their first week-end sales in their big advertising program. Every business place in town noted an increase in the volume of business and more merchandise was turned over on a cash basis than has been sold in many months.

All the houses interested in the big advertising campaign put out real leaders at a big saving which brought hundreds of people to Tinley Park during the week-end and thus made Tinley Park a real shopping center.

Saturday night fully 500 people were in town. A special price of $10 was to be awarded but as the party entitled to the award was not present the prize was merged in with this week's prize, making a $20 award. It is expected that last Saturday night's big crowd will be still larger this Saturday.

The trade stimulating campaign is not only bringing trade to Tinley Park which normally went elsewhere but it is also giving the public quality merchandise at prices that make it worth while to trade in Tinley Park.

The public has responded whole heartedly to this money saving merchandising campaign and the plan is to offer something special each week.

The Tinley Park business men put a real festive appearance to their various establishments by decorating the interiors and show windows with pennants and reprints of their co-operative full page advertisement run in this newspaper.

Persistent and consistent merchandising coupled with quality merchandise and good salesmanship at attractive prices is bound to be a winner.

EDITOR—NEWS-BULLETIN:

Bubble, bubble, toil and trouble. I don't know of anything that hits the political situation of today better than that. It is all bubbles. The worst of it is that when they burst they don't blow away, or if they do others come in their place. The galvanized republicans and wild asses can think of such candidates as Hoover, Borth or some other man who has always fought republican principles.

Hoover never was a republican or anything else in party lines. For four years he sat in the White House and let our banks go broke. Did not do a thing to secure employment for our working men in this country, although he sent money across the waters to feed the hungry there, but did nothing for the hungry of our country. As things are today the only thing that will make me vote for the re-election of Roosevelt would be the nomination of Hoover. Three or four months after he assumed office the bank wreckers went to work robbing the poor people of their hard-earned money the same as they did before.

There is good material in the Republican party. Why not take a man like James W. Wadsworth, a real Republican, a man who has never done a dishonorable act, who comes from a honorable family, and one who never makes an alliance with the other parties for nomination or election. That would give the Democrats someone to vote for even though he is a Republican. I have no use for a galvanized Republican any more than I have for a renege Democrat; they are all on par tarred with the same brush.

Roosevelt has done some good things of which saving the banks was the best, but sad to say, the damage done is more than the good. Len Small was the first spendthrift Franklin Roosevelt followed in his footsteps. We Democrats are in hopes that those of our party who are opposed to communistic form of government will unite to fight against Roosevelt and his bunch of renegade Democrats, it seems as though it is a hopeless task. I am afraid that neither party will be able to cleanse themselves of the parasites, but we hope for the best.

Special School Election At New Lenox Saturday

A special school election will be held at New Lenox next Saturday afternoon, August 17. The object of the election is to vote for two Board of Education officials, namely: James A. Tauber, candidate for President of the board of education, to fill the unexpired term of eight months, and George A. Stockley, candidate for member of the board of education for unexpired term of one year and eight months.

In addition to voting for these two candidates for members of the board of education, a special ballot will also be voted on for or against the proposition of erecting a portable school building 20 by 40 feet on the present school site.

This portable building is to take care of the overflow of students who can not be accommodated in the main school buildings. The school officials wish the public to understand that this portable school house will not call for any special bond issue nor any special increase in school taxes.

The enrollment of the New Lenox public school has increased so rapidly within the last few years, that the building is proving inadequate to accommodate all the students.

ORLAND MAN ADMITS DRIVER OF DEATH CAR

Michael C. Stirn, 143rd street and Raney's lane, Orland Park, admitted after four hours of questioning yesterday that he was the driver of the automobile that struck and fatally injured two boys on the Southwest highway near 131st street last July 22.

The boys killed were John Pitzmeyer, 14 years old, 6853 Ridgeland avenue and George Maloney, 12 years old, 6736 Ridgeland avenue. They were hit while returning to their home with a stray dog which they had found.

Stirn confessed after the lengthy questioning in the coroner's office by Chief Deputy Coroner Victor L. Schlaeger and Drs. John A. Larson and Verne W. Lyon, psychiatrists. He had previously insisted that the boys were struck by a speeding automobile ahead of him.

Blinded by Lights, He Asserts In his confession Stirn said he was blinded by the bright lights of an approaching car and at the same time was aware of another automobile coming from behind to pass him. Believing the two cars would crash head-on, Stirn said, he veered off the pavement to his right onto the shoulder of the road and his automobile struck the boys whom he had not seen.

The arrest of Stirn yesterday followed the investigation of the accident that has been carried on by Sergt. Francis Donahue of Coroner Walsh's office.

Stirn admitted that his vision is faulty. He will be held in custody until the inquest is resumed.

Reciprocal Trade Plan Shows First Results In Cuba

From Cuba comes the first tangible results of a trade plan by which the AAA hopes to restore foreign markets for pork produced by farmers in Will county and other parts of the country, said Farm Adviser L. W. Brahm. Through reciprocal trade agreements with the West Indian republic the United States already has increased its foreign market for lard.

As a result of the trade agreement Cuba imported approximately 14 million pounds of American lard during the last quarter of 1934. This was nearly four times the volume imported during the corresponding period of 1933, according to information received from the extension service of the College of Agriculture, University of Illinois.

Cuba is now the second largest importer of American lard, being exceeded only by the United Kingdom. Increased lard imports from the United States into Cuba have been made possible by the trade agreement which offers a larger outlet for Cuban sugar in this country and places a lower Cuban import tariff on American lard.

During most of the post-war period lard imports into Cuba from the United States averaged about 75 to 80 million pounds, the equivalent of lard from about 2½ million hogs. An import duty of $1.32 a hundredweight was in effect during most of that time, it is stated in a report received by the farm adviser.

In 1930, however, Cuba increased her import duties on American lard to $2.59 a hundredweight. The duty was successively increased until it amounted to $9.60 during the summer of 1934. Imports decreased as the duty increased, standing at 11,494,000 pounds in 1933 as compared to $0,541,000 pounds in 1929. Last year's imports of American lard amounted to 26,348,000, the increase being made because of the lower tariff beginning September 3, 1934, when the trade agreement went into effect.

WILL RAISE MUSHROOMS IN TINLEY PK.

Tinley Park is going to have another business enterprise which gives promise of being quite an asset to the community.

Bogdon Bros., of Frankfort, who have been conducting a mushroom raising plant in Frankfort for a number of years, have taken over the old wash machine property in Tinley Park and will start operating a mushroom raising plant here. Work of remodeling the building has already begun. In addition to the building, five acres of land adjoining the structure have also been acquired and it is understood that later on the new firm may also operate a green house.

According to present plans Bogdon Bros., expect to be able to market mushrooms raised in their Tinley Park plant by November of this year.

It is said that a number of local men will be employed at this plant.

The old wash machine building has had a hectic career since it was first built for the manufacture of wash machines about 30 years ago. A tractor plant, an airplane factory and a creosote plant have been located in this building.

Tinley Park is glad to welcome the new enterprise to its list of business establishments.

33 Hurt When Bus Upsets In Oak Lawn

Thirty-three men, women, and children were injured, eight of them seriously, yesterday afternoon when a double-decked chartered Chicago Motor Coach struck a small sedan and skidded off the road and overturned near the intersection of Cicero avenue and the Southwest Highway in Oak Lawn.

The bus was returning from a Democratic picnic sponsored by Horace Lindheimer, committeeman of the 5th ward and assistant county treasurer, which was held at Maple lake, 95th street and Wolf road in Palos township. There were seventy persons in the bus.

Witnesses Accuse Driver Frank Reech, 49 years old, 6305 Maryland avenue, was driver of the bus. Willow Springs county highway police said witnesses told them the driver failed to heed the stop sign at Cicero avenue as he was driving east in the Southwest highway. Too late he saw the automobile of J. A. Butler, Streator, Ill., coming south across the intersection.

Reech attempted to swerve the heavy bus out of the path of the smaller machine, witnesses told police, but the front end of the bus struck the rear end of Butler's car. The bus then skidded for 100 feet east, careened off the road to the south, sheered off a wooden power pole, and overturned in the ditch.

Geo. D. Letts, Former Frankfort Mayor And Life Long Resident Dies

George D. Letts, aged 78 years, former mayor of Frankfort, died at the home of his daughter, Mrs. Charles Pfaff in Frankfort Tuesday morning following a heart attack.

Mr. Letts had been living alone of late years. Monday morning when his daughter went to see him she found the screen door hooked and when she was unable to receive any answer to her calls, the door was forced and Mr. Letts was found lying on a couch stricken with a heart attack. He was removed to the Pfaff home.

Mr. Letts was born November 8, 1876 in the living quarters over the present Scheer and Stellwagen store in Frankfort. He resided in Frankfort all his life.

For many years he was a salesman for the Sharples Cream Separator Co. He served as mayor of Frankfort for one term.

Mr. Letts came of a sturdy pioneer stock. His ancestors came from England to the Colonies in 1665. His father James R. Letts located in Frankfort and conducted a hotel and livery. His grandfather Jeremiah Letts came to Will County in 1845 and built the Brick Tavern now still standing along the Lincoln Highway between Frankfort and New Lenox.

Only a few weeks ago Mr. Letts appeared before the village board of Frankfort and gave a very interesting story which he had attested before a notary public to the effect that the horse which General Wm. T. Sherman rode in his famous march from Atlanta to the sea during the Civil War, was brought to Frankfort by a Dr. Sanger in the early seventies and kept on his farm now known as the Thompson farm where the horse died and is buried.

Mr. Letts well remembered the famous horse as he often saw it in Frankfort when he was a boy. As a result of the account given by Mr. Letts regarding Sherman's horse, the village board of Frankfort has appointed a committee to delve further into the account with a view of having a monument erected to the horse which carried the famous general in his great march.

Mr. Letts retired to private life at the close of his term as mayor of Frankfort. His wife, Mrs. Eva Carpenter Letts died in 1913. Mr. Letts is survived by one daughter, Mrs. Jennie Pfaff, of Frankfort; one son Albert of Kansas City, Mo., three brothers, Fred Letts of Denver, Colo., Bert of Webster City, Iowa; and Frank of Kansas City and four sisters, Mrs. Elizabeth Edmonson of California; Mrs. Jennie Burdett of Kansas City; Mrs. Flora Silver of Denver and Mrs. Dora Graham of Webster City.

Mr. Letts was a member of the Masonic fraternity for many years and Masonic funeral services were held at the Pfaff home in Frankfort Thursday afternoon at 2 o'clock. Burial was made in the Pleasant Hill cemetery at Frankfort.

There's Always Another Year

SYNOPSIS

To the little town of Heron River comes Anna ("Silver") Grenoble, daughter of "Gentleman Jim," formerly of the community, known as a gambler, news of whose murder in Chicago has reached the town. Sophronia Willard, Jim Grenoble's sister, is at the depot to meet Silver. Her household consists of her husband, and stepsons, Roderick and Jason. The Willards own only half of the farm, the other half being Anna Grenoble's. On Silver's arrival Duke Melbank, shiftless youth, makes himself obnoxious. Sophronia slaps him. Roderick is on the eve of marriage to Corinne Meader, daughter of a failed banker. Silver declares her eagerness to live with her aunt, on the farm, and will not sell her portion.

She saw the unobtrusive, faded tan of the wall paper, with the silver stripe in it. That was not in bad taste, she thought stoutly. The curtains were of ecru net, with side strips and valance of plain blue rep; that had been Roddy's idea. She saw the upright piano of black walnut, the keys yellowing, and recalled that until Roddy had removed it there had been a handsome green velvet scarf on its top, hand-painted in pink roses. Sophronia looked at the walls and thought how much cosier they had been with the pictures and mottoes on them, and the burnt leather panel with the head of Pocahontas and the little calendar below. Now, on the wall opposite her, were three smallish etchings, placed step-ladder fashion. Black and white—no color or life to them! One was only land and sky, the second the same with a windmill stuck in it, and the third was an old horse plodding across a frozen pond dragging a two-wheeled cart.

"And is this lawyer—this Benjamin Hubbard you speak of—" old Roderick was saying—"is he looking after all the—the arrangements?"

"Yes," Silver replied softly but very clearly. "Ben is looking after everything. It was dad's wish that his body should be cremated and his ashes sent here—to be near mother's grave."

"And did he live long enough to tell you that?" Phonie asked, clearing her throat.

"Oh—he spoke of that some months ago," Silver said, "right after he had his first heart attack. But he mentioned it again—before he died."

"I see," Phonie winked rapidly several times.

The men shifted their feet in awkward silence.

Sophronia kept her eyes on Silver as the girl continued speaking in the same subdued tone. Almost as though she had been there, Sophronia experienced in Silver's telling, the events of the summer. She saw the scorching day in June when Jim Grenoble had crumpled forward on the street and the doctor had warned him. She saw Jim's eyes as he had looked then—levelly into the face of doom. She heard the doctor's voice telling Jim that one of these days his heart would snap like a rubber band that had been stretched too far. She heard Jim asking his daughter Silver to see to it—if anything happened—that his ashes should rest in the country cemetery at Heron River. Sophronia could hear Silver promising—and pleading desperately with him then to go away with her to some quiet place, away from the tension and fever of the life they were living. And she could see him patting his daughter's hand gently and telling her that they would go soon—just as soon as they had enough money put by.

"Yes," Silver Replied Softly but Very Clearly.

Presently when Silver fell silent and sat looking intently at her clasped hands, old Roderick went to her and laid his hand gently on her shoulder, patted it without a word, and then moved into the kitchen, where he lifted the stove lid and knocked out the ashes from his pipe. Jason followed immediately and went out of doors.

Phonie said, "Did Jim never mention wantin' to come back—I mean—before he knew he was dyin'?"

Silver raised her eyes, and for a moment Sophronia thought she saw in them something secret and fearful in their expression, something startling. The girl parted her lips and then looked fixedly at the wall opposite her. Phonie had the feeling that Silver had been about to impart some difficult information, and then had changed her mind.

"Yes—he was coming back," she said slowly. "He and I were all ready to come. We had planned to take this morning's train—the one I took alone."

Sophronia started. Her handkerchief dropped limply into her lap. Then, without warning, two large tears rolled from her lids and down her long brown cheeks.

"Please don't," Silver breathed. "I'm sorry—I shouldn't have—"

"Never mind me!" Sophronia exclaimed in a tremendous voice. "I'm an old fool. I thought we wouldn't talk about it tonight. But—well, it's time we were all turnin' in." She got to her feet. "Looks as if Roddy won't be comin' home tonight. Jase!" Her younger stepson had entered the room again. "Light the upstairs lamps!"

More than darkness, more than starlight and an indolent wind flowed into Silver's room through the dormer windows. Silver had been gazing at them for over an hour, and the company that entered there was palpable as her heart-beat, undeniable as a truth individualized in loneliness. The company was composed of Jim Grenoble's love for her mother, Anna; of his tragic loss; his subsequent folly. But it had other members as well: the murmur of trees Jim had planted in his boyhood, the ripe fragrance of fields he had tilled, the faint, gliding chuckle of the creek under the willows, in the ravine below.

She reached for the flashlight she had left on the small table beside the bed. She sat for a moment holding it and listening to the dense silence of the house, separating that silence from the winged presences of her own room.

The others would be asleep now. Barefooted, her high-heeled mules in her hand, and a quilted robe about her, Silver stole downstairs, using the flashlight to guide her through the dark. Once outside the house, it was a simple matter to follow the gentle slope down to the old stone building. Presently she knew she had come to the dooryard of the old house, for the air about her had subtly changed, as though time itself had gathered there. Ygrasili—her father had not permitted her memory of it to die. Anna Grenoble had named it so. Silver had told Sister Anastasia, in one of the numerous convents of her girlhood, about Ygrasili, and the nun had said, "Your mother must have been a poet, Silver."

Silver felt her way in her insecure slippers across the ground to the left, the direction from which came the sound of the creek. She seated herself and presently, overcome with weariness, sank down with her head on her arms. It was only twenty-four hours now since Jim Grenoble had died. Just twenty-four hours since this spell of unreality had come upon her. She had not been able to cry, because crying was something real.

Dad Jim had gambled from the first—even in Cheyenne, where he had gone into business with a horse-trader, immediately after they had begun their roaming. She had been a little too young then to fear for Dad Jim.

It was inevitable that he should die as he had died. There was a relentless rightness in his going the way he had gone. At a hacienda near Mexico City, a peon in the employ of Carlos Salamanca had darted out from behind a pomegranate tree one moonlight night after Jim had taken four thousand dollars from his master, but Jim had broken the wrist of the hand that held the knife and had kept the knife as a souvenir of a close call.

She sat up and clasped her arms about her knees and gazed with burning, dry eyes down at the dark flow of the creek. What would that strange aunt of hers, Dad Jim's sister, have thought if she had told her that there had been another reason, besides his failing heart, for Jim Grenoble's sudden decision to return? Perhaps some day she would tell Sophronia about Gerald Lucas. Some day, when his cool power over her and her capitulation to him was only an evil dream, she might tell Sophronia that it was really from Gerald Lucas that she had fled; that Jim, knowing Gerald for what he was, had been overcome by the knowledge that Silver was in love with him, and had blamed himself for exposing her to the corruption of his own life.

Silver Grenoble, as she lay under the willow tree, was conscious of a great weariness, she knew deeply that a change was coming, pervasive and calm, into her being.

Roddy Willard brought his car to the curb in front of Torson's place, turned off the lights and stepped down. Someone hailed him from across the street, but he hesitated only a moment and waved his hand.

At the end of the lunch counter, Duke Melbank lounged, rolling a cigarette in his pale, freckled hands. His red hair flamed.

"A cup of coffee, Lena," Roddy said to the elder Torson girl as she greeted him with a smile.

Then he turned to speak to Duke. "Time you were in bed, Duke," he remarked pleasantly. This tall, soft hulk of a fellow was beneath contempt, beneath anger, even for Sophronia's sake, although he had been spreading gossip about Phonie's niece ever since his famous visit to Chicago earlier in the summer.

"You been away," Duke said as he slumped down upon a stool. "Duke checks up on us, Lena," Roddy smiled. "We've got to watch our step."

"No," Duke objected. "I was just thinkin' you ain't heard, maybe, about old Jim Grenoble."

"Gentleman Jim?"

"Sure. Him I seen when I was to Chi last month. I could 'a' told then he wouldn't come to no good end."

"Anything happened?" Roddy asked. There was a certain leering knowledge about Duke that filled him, as always, with distaste.

"Plenty! He got himself shot last night."

"My G—d!" Roddy exclaimed. "Who shot him?"

"Fella named Rawson, it was. The police got him. Killed him when he was tryin' to make his getaway. Some o' them guys can shoot, no foolin'!"

"Poor old Jim!" Roddy said to himself. "Sophronia will take that pretty hard, I'm afraid."

Duke laughed mirthlessly. "Not so's you'd notice it."

"You've seen her?"

"I seen her, all right, all right. And how! She was down to meet the train tonight."

"You mean—they sent the body—?"

Duke's hands played together. "Not exactly. The one that came in tonight wasn't what you'd call a dead one, eh, Lena? I'll tell the world! It was Jim's daughter. Her I seen that night in Chi with a big shot by the name o' Lucas."

"Is she here?"

"She's out to the farm, if that's what you mean. But that oughtn't to worry you none. She won't be stayin' long in these parts, if I know anything. Her kind don't belong round here."

He chuckled. "I've got her number, all right, all right!"

But Roddy did not hear the innuendo. Duke's disclosure had flashed like lightning across his mind. He tossed a coin on the counter, seized his hat and made for the door. Driving home, he realized that he was as near to panic as he had ever been in his life. What would this girl's coming mean? She would undoubtedly sell her land for cash. It was not likely that a couple of hundred a year rental would interest her. He had been sending that amount to Jim Grenoble, after the deduction of taxes, and Jim had promptly sent it back each time to his sister Sophronia. Five years ago, the land might have come into the possession of the Willards, had it not been for Jim Grenoble's obstinacy. Instead, the money that might have bought it had gone into bad investments. How, if they lost the Grenoble section, were all the Willards going to live on the meager income from their own land, which was, by some trick of nature, not half so rich? And in a week he, Roddy, would have a wife to support as well.

Rapidly he took stock of himself. It was three years now since he had been graduated from college, and although he still clung jealously to what he had learned there, the soil had taken him back to itself again. He had worked the Grenoble land since he was fifteen, and had vowed that some day it would be his own in fact. And now—

Roddy brought his car to a stop in the little garage beside the barn, and climbed out of it. He walked slowly through the starlit darkness up the path to the house.

He let himself in through the back door and struck a match, found the lamp and lit it. Odd, he thought, but he could have sworn he had heard a footstep in the front hall. He moved through the house and saw a white-faced girl standing in the hall with one foot on the first step of the stairway. She had a flowered, thick robe wrapped tightly about her, and she carried a flashlight and a pair of slippers. Her hair hung to her shoulders, and was soft and pale and wavy, and her eyes were, in that startling moment, enormous.

Silver was the first to speak. "I suppose you are Roddy Willard," she said, almost breathlessly. "Yes," he said, and came forward with his hand outstretched. "And you are Anna Grenoble, of course." He tried to relax his mouth into a smile, to check his agitation.

Her hand lay for an instant in his, while they surveyed each other with cool appraisal.

"Yes," she said, smiling faintly. "I only just heard—in Heron River—about what happened to your father," he said haltingly. "I'm terribly sorry."

Silver stood with one hand on the balustrade and gave him a shadowy look. "Thank you, I—" Her voice trailed away. "I couldn't sleep—so I went for a walk—down to the old house. I—I didn't expect to be caught prowling. She gave him an odd look, half apology, half defiance. "Good night," she said.

Sleep was out of the question. Roddy went back to the kitchen, turned the lamp low and stepped out the back door. The delicate bitterness of coming harvest filled his nostrils when he drew a deep breath. In a few days he would be a married man—and Corinne Meader established in the house of a farmer who looked into the future with blind eyes.

He found it difficult to believe that Jim Grenoble's death had coincided so nearly with his asking Corinne to marry him. It was almost like rust coming on the eve of reaping.

CHAPTER IV

Toward noon of the next day, Sophronia and Silver stood together on a crest of the gentle ridge which supported the new farmstead. The girl had her hands in the pockets of her white linen dress, and her eyes, which Phonie had ascertained were a very dark blue, were fixed upon the old house down below. Phonie followed her glance, and saw that old Roderick had placed a ladder against the north wall, and with an armful of shingles and tools had begun the ascent of the roof.

"Tell me, Phonie," Silver asked suddenly, "are you moving into the old house because Roddy is getting married, or because I am here?"

"Because you are here?" Phonie was indignant. "I never heard the like! Roderick and I always said that as soon as either of the boys gets married, back we go to the old place. Young people have a right to start out by themselves, I always hold."

"Two Months Ago—I Thought I Wanted to Marry Him."

Silver was silent for a moment as she thought over what her aunt had said. "I'm glad," she murmured at last. "I was afraid—perhaps—"

"Afraid of what?"

"I thought maybe Roddy's wife might not approve of me—because of dad."

The angry red sprang into Sophronia's cheeks. "She won't approve of me, neither, then—I'm Jim's sister. Corinne Meader ought to be glad she's got a home to come to, if I know anything. And I don't think she'll be fool enough to listen to every Tom-Dick-and-Harry's yarns. And if she does—let her! Jason'll stay with them in the new house, 'cause he fixed up his own room in the attic there just the way he likes it—with a skylight an' all for his funny oil paintin'. Jason's a queer one—but he won't bother Corinne, unless she can't stand him and his mouth organ."

"You said something about 'yarns,' Phonie," Silver said. "Do you mean things that fellow at the station last night has said about me?"

Sophronia hesitated for a moment. "Well, there's no use tryin' to hide from you what you'll find out for yourself anyhow, sooner or later. You know what people are, just as well as I do. When they've got nothing to do, they'll talk. Did you see that Duke Melbank when he was in Chicago this summer?"

"Dad said he came into our place one night, but I don't remember seeing him. So many people used to come and go."

"Well, he ain't worth rememberin'. But he has been talkin' since he came back."

Silver laughed ruefully. "Was he talking about dad?"

"Well—mostly about you."

Color rushed into Silver's cheeks. "About me? What does that creature know about me?"

Sophronia smiled reassuringly. "Some people talk most when they know least. As far as I can make out—the boys have been tellin' me—Duke don't say so much, but he hints plenty. There was a friend of Jim's, wasn't there? A fellow by the name of Lucas, I think."

"Gerald Lucas," Silver said, with her eyes fixed upon the downward slope of the hill. "I met him six months ago—two months ago—I thought I wanted to marry him."

"What manner of fellow was he?"

Phonie asked, conversationally.

"Gerald used to practice law out West, but he got into some sort of trouble and was disbarred. Now he's against the world—and the world is against him."

Sophronia nodded sagely. "I guess I understand. Them outcasts appeal to women. I'm glad you got away from him without anything worse happenin'."

Silver's eyes darted to her aunt's face. Her heart sank. Sophronia was of another world, a good woman, placidly taking it for granted that her niece was still virtuous. Over the bleak loneliness that welled up within her, Silver resolved that it was better not to disillusion Phonie. After all, she need never know.

Lesson for August 18

MARTHA

LESSON TEXT—Luke 10:38-42; John 11:17-28.

GOLDEN TEXT—Jesus loved Martha, and her sister, and Lazarus.—John 11:5.

PRIMARY TOPIC—A Home Jesus Loved.

JUNIOR TOPIC—A Home Jesus Visited.

INTERMEDIATE AND SENIOR TOPIC—How Can I Help at Home?

YOUNG PEOPLE AND ADULT TOPIC—A Home That Attracts Jesus.

The lesson committee designated Martha as a home-maker. That she was a home-maker is to be conceded, but to view this lesson only in that light is to miss its vital point, for Christ's teachings here are equally appropriate to male and female, in the home, office, shop, schoolroom, farm, etc.

I. Jesus Revealing to Martha Her Supreme Need (Luke 10:38-42).

1. Jesus welcomed into her home (v. 38). Though Jesus had no home of his own, he could come into this home at any time and throw off the restraints incident to public ministry. What a blessed thing it would be if all homes were open to receive Jesus.

2. Mary sitting at Jesus' feet (v. 39). While this was Martha's home, Mary seemed to have lived with her. Mary had a peculiar spiritual insight which prompted her to sit at Jesus' feet and listen to his words. The real place to hear Jesus' words is "at his feet." Let no one imagine that Mary did not render any service, for the little word "also" indicates that she had been serving with Martha.

3. Martha's complaint (v. 40). She was so bent on providing a good meal for Jesus that she was on the verge of distraction. Her many assumed duties had so got on her nerves that she not only found fault with Mary, but even censured Jesus for allowing Mary to sit at his feet while dinner was being finished. She even assumed the authority to command Jesus to send Mary back to help her. The sure way to serve without distraction is to first sit at Jesus' feet and listen to his words.

4. Jesus' reply (vv. 41, 42).

a. He rebuked Martha (v. 41). This rebuke he administered most tenderly, for he knew that Martha loved him sincerely. Those who are supremely occupied with Jesus are anxious for nothing (Phil. 4:6).

b. He defended Mary (v. 42). In this defense he declared that there was but one thing needful and that Mary had chosen that good part which could not be taken from her. Those who choose this good part cannot be robbed of it by friends, foes, or circumstances.

II. A Revelation of Christ's Love (John 11:1-36).

1. The sickness of Lazarus (vv. 1, 2). Even those who are in close fellowship with the Lord are not immune from sickness. Sorrow comes even to the homes where Jesus is loved.

2. Martha and Mary send for Jesus (v. 3). Because they had come to know Jesus as more than a mere man, they instinctively turned to him when this shadow fell across their home.

3. Jesus' strange delay (vv. 4-6). They sent for Jesus because he loved Lazarus. They said, "He whom thou lovest is sick." Jesus abode in the same place because he loved Lazarus and his sisters (v. 5). This mystery is to be explained by the fact that Jesus was divine and knew all things.

4. Jesus goes to the Bethany home (vv. 7-17). His mission in going into this home was twofold; to minister to the sisters and brother and to strengthen the faith of the disciples (v. 11-15).

5. Jesus teaching Martha (vv. 18-27). As he was nearing the village, Martha met him with a complaint because of his delay. He ignored her complaint and taught her concerning the resurrection and the life.

a. "Thy brother shall rise again" (v. 23). He is saying these words to every sorrowing sister, brother, wife, husband, child, and parent.

b. "I am the resurrection, and the life" (vv. 25, 26). He is the source of life, and all who are joined to him by a living faith are in such vital fellowship as to be unaffected by bodily change.

6. Jesus weeping with Mary (vv. 28-35). In response to the Master's call Mary fell at his feet, uttering the same words used by Martha, but, no doubt, in a different tone of voice and attitude. Her words were responded to with tears. "Jesus wept."

III. Jesus Raising Lazarus (vv. 36-44). His great sympathy now expressed itself in supernatural power. Sympathy would be valueless without this connection with divine power.

Music

Music, like a true coin, rings best on the domestic hearthstone. The essence of it no more belongs to the concert room than—reverently let it be said—does religion to the church. It must needs be an everyday matter, entering the hearts and homes of the people, otherwise its true functions remain unfulfilled.

WHEE-ee-ee-ee!

Dismal yet imperative was the sound just beyond the left elbow which George had thrust jauntily from his straight-eight roadster. With sinking heart he glanced out to see the goggled apparition drawing abreast of him.

"Pinched," breathed George.

As the traffic officer dismounted and strode toward them Sarah Anne patted her blond hair. "Oh, dear!" she said.

"That's what we get for pulling the curtain down," whispered Sarah Anne. "You couldn't watch in the mirror."

George didn't reply at once, for the officer had put one boot on the running board and was reaching inside his jacket for the ticket book.

"Pretty fast for Sunday afternoon, brother," he remarked pleasantly.

George's eyes opened innocently. "Was I over the limit, officer?"

"About ten over," said the law. "Sorry, but I'll have to give you a ticket."

"Okay," said George. He hoped Cora wouldn't sound off from the rumble seat; he wanted to take his medicine like a good sport before Sarah Anne. Probably his wife would start trying to argue with the cop.

But strangely enough, Cora didn't say anything, and neither did Sara Anne's husband. Naturally Pete wouldn't, George told himself sourly. Nor would he offer to split the fine. Funny how he had let the bus go over the limit. With Sarah Anne beside him he might have hopped up the bus without noticing it. If he hadn't pulled down the curtain he might have seen the cop in the mirror and slowed down. George grinned, watching the officer's busy pencil. Well, pulling down that curtain had been worth getting pinched. What a laugh on Pete, telling him the sun was on their necks so they'd have to pull the curtain down—then kissing Sarah Anne not a foot from Pete's nose!

"There you are," said the traffic officer, tearing the slip from his book and handing it to George. "You appear tomorrow, either at ten in the morning or three in the afternoon."

"Okay, officer. But the fact is, I think my speedometer's off."

The officer grinned cryptically, his glance wavering just for a second over the golden Sarah Anne whose robe did not quite conceal her charming blue bathing suit. "Maybe so. Sometimes the judge takes that into consideration if you can show a speedometer test."

When the officer had roared away, Pete yelled from the rumble seat: "Tough luck, old man," and Cora said: "George, you ought to be more careful."

"I'd think," said Sarah Anne, in the acid tone reserved for her husband, "you'd tell George when you hear a motorcycle."

"He was mighty quiet," said Pete plaintively. "He coasted down this hill on us and I didn't know he was there until he sounded the siren."

As he gave his black tie final touches, and admired his chin in the mirror that night dressing for the Beach club dance, George congratulated himself on his smoothness. Not every guy could have a little fun on the side and not get into a jam. Right under Cora's nose, too, that was the scream.

Next day George went to the Motor Fixit shop. From several summers at Romona Beach he knew young Jasper. "Think you could make that speedometer slow—for a couple of bucks?" asked George jovially.

Jasper smiled just a little. Said Jasper, "It'll cost you one buck to have it tested, and maybe it will really be off. We'll see."

As a matter of fact, it was. Jasper found the speedometer seven miles slow.

"Say, that's great!" George exclaimed. "That makes me liable for only three miles over the limit. The judge ought to let that pass."

"Probably. I'll give you a letter on the test and you can show him that."

So that afternoon promptly at three, George waited with half a dozen other violators. The big Irish cop was present and the sour old judge was slapping on the limit. George heard him impose fines of twenty, fifty, and seventy-five like nothing at all.

When his turn came he handed up his ticket along with the affidavit from the Motor Fixit shop, and winked at the Irish cop.

"Fifty dollars," said the judge. "Next case."

George blinked. "F-fifty dollars?" "That's what I said. Death has been riding these roads, young man, and that's got to stop."

"But what about that letter there—about the speedometer?"

"I saw it," said the judge. "Speed's not the only thing we're watching. Young people spooning in motor cars on the move—that's part of the trouble, so we ring the Blue law fines on that kind."

"But, your honor," said George indignantly. "We were a respectable party. We—"

"Yes, sir. The defendant was going fifty-five miles an hour in a forty-five mile zone. They all had bathing suits on, and the pair in the rumble seat were doing a clinch that would make the movies ashamed of themselves."

Somebody in the courtroom laughed. The judge pounded furiously.

"Fifty dollars," he said to George, "and I'm letting you off easy."

A PLEASANT VISIT

SITTING safe and comfortable in the hollow stump to which Whitefoot the Woodmouse had led him, Danny Meadow Mouse told Whitefoot all about his adventures from the time he had visited the Smiling Pool right up to the moment when Whitefoot had come to his rescue. Whitefoot listened without saying a word until Danny's story was ended. Then he gravely shook his head.

"It was a crazy thing to do, Cousin Danny. It certainly was a crazy thing to do," said he.

"What was a crazy thing to do?" demanded Danny, looking puzzled.

"Going so far away from home when there was no need of it," replied Whitefoot. "I thought you were too wise to take such foolish risks. At your age you should know better. It might be excusable in a youngster with no family to think of, but one of your age should have known better."

"I guess you are right, Cousin Whitefoot," replied Danny meekly. "I've learned a lesson I'll never forget. I've had frights enough to last me all the rest of my life and if I ever get home I'll never leave it again. I guess I ought to be starting along right now."

"I guess you ought to do nothing of the sort," retorted Whitefoot promptly. "The thing for you to do now is to rest and get yourself in condition."

Danny sighed. "I don't know but what you are right, Cousin Whitefoot," said he. "I really don't feel as if I could face danger again this night. My nerves are rather upset. This is a very nice, comfortable place you have here. It is one of the most comfort-foot many things about the Green Meadows. Whitefoot was sure that the Green Forest was the finest place in all the Great World in which to live. Danny was sure that it didn't compare with the Green Meadows, and they argued the matter over and over. But the argument was quite good-natured and simply showed that the things one is used to are the things one loves best. To Danny the Green Forest was filled with terrible dangers. To Whitefoot the Green Meadows seemed a place where there could be no such thing as real safety. So they argued and argued and had a perfectly splendid time.

able places I've been in for a great while.

Whitefoot looked pleased. "I'm glad you like it," said he. "I think it is rather good myself. I have two or three other places quite as good. Now the thing for you to do, Cousin Danny, is to stay here the rest of the night and make yourself right at home."

To this Danny agreed, for he really did not feel equal to going any farther that night. So he and Whitefoot slept a little and talked a great deal. Danny learned many things about the Green Forest and in turn told White-

FASCINATING TALES OF LOST MINES

© W. N. U. By Editha L. Watson

NAVAHO GOLD

WESTERN newspapers during the spring of 1915 carried a story which dates back to 1546. In that distant year, it is said, the Spanish explorers of the West discovered a placer in the Navaho country. It was lost, in the manner of so many old Spanish mines, but the story of its existence and its richness, and the approximate location of the place, persisted.

James O'Rourke, a western congressman, heard the story, and was inspired by it to gather together a small party and to go down into the Navaho country to search for the lost placer mine.

The party succeeded beyond their hopes. In a canyon somewhere in that strange region they came across a pile of stones which marked the location of some 200 pounds of silver matte and also a number of fine gold nuggets. This, they felt, must be a sign of the place they were hunting, and they camped that night at the cache.

The Navaho, however, had an idea that these white men were trespassers on their land. Any gold or silver that lay within the reservation belonged to them. So it was only natural that a band of these Indians should rout out the intruders, chase them up a box canyon from which they could not escape.

Prospectors who happened to come that way finally rescued the party, which returned home much the worse for wear. The only treasure they had to show for this chase of the golden phantom was the handful of gold nuggets, which they had taken on sight.

Perhaps that lost Spanish mine is the same as Pech-la-Ki, a word which is a combination of Navaho and Spanish and means "white money."

This mine is also in the Navaho country, somewhere near the famous Four Corners where Colorado, Utah, Arizona and New Mexico meet. The Navaho have sold silver specimens from Pech-la-Ki for many years, and more than one prospector has tried to find the source of their wealth, but a series of lost lives mark the search.

This, too, may have been the mine found long ago by Merrick and Mitchell. They were young prospectors in the Navaho country who came upon a rude forge or furnace and some nuggets of gold. While they were searching for the ledge from which the ore had come, Indians discovered them and both were killed.

In 1882 an old prospector, Charles T. Johnson, retraced their route, and in doing so became separated from the rest of his party. He got lost in a forest of fallen timber, which was impassable on horseback, so he left his horse and tried to get out on foot. While climbing about over the rotten logs he lost his balance, fell down a steep incline and brought up in a mine, which apparently had caved in at this place. A vein of white quartz containing much gold met his eyes, and he was certain that at last he had found the lost mine.

His friends, who were searching for him in the forest, heard his shouts and helped him out of the place. But for some reason it is not recorded that he or they ever went back to the shaft.

Another echo from the Navaho country was heard when a priest appeared in Prescott, Ariz., many years ago, searching for a cache of gold. He had been told about this hidden treasure, he said, by a man who died in the hospital of the Sisters of Charity in Denver.

This man and two others had taken $75,000 in gold out of a placer mine on the Navaho reservation, and they had fled with their wealth when the tribesmen discovered their presence. In getting away from the region, to avoid as much contact as possible with the Navaho and their neighbors, the fugitives had traveled south through western New Mexico, crossed the Mogollon mountains, followed the Gila river to the Verde, and at last had reached Prescott in this devious manner. On the way two of the men died, one of malaria, the other from wounds given him by the Indians, so that the man who told the story was the sole survivor. He, afraid that retribution would overtake him also, buried the gold under a boulder near a spring, at the foot of a mountain past which a stream flowed into a small valley. The place he described as near Prescott.

He never dared to return to his cache; evidently his fear of the Indians was based on first-hand knowledge. But on his dying bed he begged the priest to go and recover the gold for the use of the hospital.

In case a placer mine, a ledge, a shaft, and gold and silver together may prove to be too puzzling a combination, a few words of explanation will clear up the matter. The Spaniards found the placer first, and then, looking about for the source of its gold, they saw the ledge, where gold and silver ores were mingled.

Roasting the silver in their rude furnace produced the matte, and the silver was probably taken away in this form, to be chemically treated in Mexico. While working thereabouts, a shaft was sunk in the search for further gold, which led to the development of the mine.

IT HAPPENED IN TINLEY PARK

By Dr. C. E. Schultz

There are some guys around this town
Who rant, and rave, and brag,
and clown,
About the speed of a Ford "V"-8,
A benzine wagon or some other crate.
And ultimately they reach their goal,
By wrapping it around a telephone pole.

Their girl friends often hear big talk,
As they go with them for a walk
Or stroll along a shady knoll,
Of fast driven cars, a narrow escape,
Tight squeezes, or some other scrape,
How Gabriel almost called the roll
When they wrapped their Ford 'round a telephone pole.

'Tis sad, but true, some lives and souls
Are lost each year at speedway bows.
These crashes will happen, but I do declare,
Don't make a racetrack of our thoroughfare.
Many innocent victims, yearly, are killed
By cars, whose drivers by speed thrilled.
Let's take it a bit easy and on the whole,
Don't wrap it around a telephone pole.

Don't you think fellows are really "nuts"
When they drive too fast and they hit the ruts,
Bounce into a tree and lose control,
And wrap the car 'round a telephone pole?

Now when I want to end this life,
With its troubles, worries, hardships and strife,
And death is about ready to take its toll,
I'll wrap my auto-car around, A handy, convenient, telephone pole.

A Lightning Change Artist

A can of corn, before it is opened, appears to be a comfortable-looking cylindrical tin container with an appetizing-looking label depicting and describing its contents, as it stands snugly on your pantry shelf. But the moment it's opened a can of corn becomes a lightning-change artist of many varied possibilities. It may become, according to your taste, a cake, a casserole, a chowder, a fritter, an omelet, a pudding, a salad, a scallop, a soup, a stuffing, or, in combination with beans, a succotash.

Of course you probably like corn just as it comes from the can, but you may want to vary occasionally from that. If you do, stir into the contents of a No. 2 can of corn two eggs, two tablespoons of flour, a teaspoon of baking powder, a dash of cayenne and half a teaspoon of salt. Pour in a buttered baking dish, dot with butter and bake, and you'll have an entirely different dish.

Here Are Some Roles

How does canned corn become a cake? Well, here's a recipe for Corn Cakes: Beat two eggs well, add half a cup of sour milk, one-fourth teaspoon soda and a cup of canned corn. Sift together one cup flour, one-half teaspoon salt and two teaspoons baking powder, and add. Add one tablespoon melted butter, and fry in small cakes on a hot griddle. Serve with pork sausage and gravy or with maple syrup.

Corn's lightning-change to a casserole is accomplished in the following

Corn and Mushroom Casserole: Sauté two tablespoons sliced onions and the sliced mushrooms from a 4-ounce can in one tablespoon butter for several minutes. Add the contents of a No. 2 can creamy corn, three-fourths cup grated cheese, three-fourths cup chili sauce and salt and pepper, and turn into a buttered casserole. Bake in a moderate—375 degree—oven for about thirty minutes. Serves six.

YOU DON'T HAVE TO "BREAK IN"
THE FORD V-8

You can drive it 50 miles an hour the day you buy it

THE FORD V-8 is ready for normal driving when you buy it. There is no tedious period of breaking-in for 500 or 1000 miles. You can drive it up to 50 miles an hour the first day. And after the first hundred miles you can drive it as fast as you desire.

That means greater motoring enjoyment for every motorist. It is especially important to motorists who are thinking about a new car for a vacation trip — to physicians, salesmen and all those who use a car for business. Instead of dragging along at slow speeds for days, you can make good time from the start.

The reason for this is as important as the result. The Ford V-8 needs no breaking-in because of unusual accuracy in the manufacture of moving parts and the smoothness of bearing surfaces. Clearances are correct when you buy the car. It is not necessary to depend on a long wearing-in period to eliminate tightness and insure smooth running. Longer life, greater economy and better performance are bound to result from such precision methods. The Ford V-8 gives you fine-car construction, along with fine-car performance, comfort, safety and beauty.

Engineer's Heating Cost Estimate . . $150.00 yearly
Actual Cost (from bills paid) . . . 125.04

MANY thousands of home owners have now had one or even two heating seasons in which to judge gas heat. Now they know its many advantages over other heating methods, other types of fuel. They've saved hours of the wearying drudgery of shoveling coal and hauling ashes because gas heat is automatic. After an entire heating season walls and furnishings are still clean. There is no soot, no dirt or grime. They know, too, how comparatively little it costs to have the benefits of this care-free heating service.

Gas heat does not reduce heating costs—but it does give you far more for the money you spend. Gas heat saves you worry, labor. It gives you household cleanliness. It provides your homewith comforts never before possible. For these services, for these countless conveniences, gas heat asks only a few cents more a week. But in return, gas heat will give you greater dollar and cents value than any other heating method you can name.

Investigate gas heat today. Ask to have an engineer survey your home and give you an accurate estimate. You will learn quickly just how much it will cost to provide your home with all the advantages gas heat offers.

GAS HEAT PLUS INSULATION

Gas heat offers a new service. You may accept a plan whereby the roof of your house is fully insulated with the finest of materials. This insulation provides a double benefit—keeping the heat out in Summer, keeping heat inside in Winter. Heat losses are radically reduced, fuel bills cut. Pay for this unique insulation plan on a budget basis—a small monthly payment with your gas bill.

Canned Foods Met All Tests

Proved Lifesavers on Voyage Around the World

HOW the crew of the "Seth Parker" fared on an exclusive diet of canned foods for more than seven weeks, and ate them all around the world to Samoa, has been vividly told by Captain Constantine Flink, the ship's navigating officer. The "Seth Parker" is the famous four-master which sailed last year under the command of Phillips Lord who created the radio character after which it was named.

The ship's voyage took it through the furnace heat of the equator and the freezing cold of the North Atlantic in mid-winter, but the canned foods it carried stood up through all changes of temperature and proved lifesavers throughout the trip.

Seven Weeks Without Fresh Food

"We expected," said Flink, who has been on sailing ships for over thirty years, "to sail the seven hundred miles from Panama to the Galapagos Islands in about a week, but like the Ancient Mariner, we were becalmed in the doldrums, and it was well into the ninth week before we reached the islands. After the first two weeks out of Panama all of our fresh food was exhausted, and we had to rely exclusively on our canned supplies.

"Fortunately we had brought along some canned loganberry juice and canned tomato juice. There was never a sign among our crew of that dread scourge of the seas, scurvy, which was so prevalent in the old days of sailing vessels that British ships were called 'lime juiceers' because they were required by law to serve lime juice to the crew to ward off this disease.

"But even if we had not had the loganberry and tomato juice, we would not have feared scurvy, as we had a plentiful supply of canned spinach, beans, carrots, peas and other vegetables which are equally good preventatives. We also had such meats as canned corned beef and frankfurters, and such fish as canned clam chowder and codfish cakes. These latter foods were luxuries because you can't catch fish at sea, you know, except once in a long while a stray dolphin.

And Then Mostly Canned Foods

"At the Galapagos Islands we caught a big haul—two tons—of fresh fish, but we couldn't get much there in the way of green vegetables or fresh fruit. We got a large supply of wild lemons, but that was all in the way of fruit, and for fresh meat we killed two wild bulls.

"It really wasn't until we reached the Marquesas about a month later that we could get a plentiful supply of fresh foods, so for nearly three months the chief part of our diet consisted of canned foods. And we all kept healthy and liked it. We had some things which are not usually canned put up in tins to preserve them at sea through all the varying temperatures. Shredded wheat, for instance. And we had powdered milk and malted milk as well as evaporated milk.

"As a matter of fact, we subsisted largely on canned foods during the entire voyage."

THE MENACE OF THE LOBBY

By RAYMOND PITCAIRN
National Chairman, Sentinels of the Republic

Congress, as this is written, is plunging into a probe of lobbies and their influence upon national legislation.

Not a bad idea—even though it may prove a two-edged sword, slashing at pressure politics from within as well as from without!

But whenever it may wound, the investigation will serve a worthy purpose if it brings forcibly to the attention of the American people the growing evil of rule by organized groups—whether composed of office-holders or of private citizens. For it is through the power of lobbies and of pressure politics that such forces seek to utilize Congress as a lever to loosen the foundations on which rest our American form of government.

The American people must realize—

That if economic theorists can, by Federal law, prohibit or utterly control the organization of business, big and little . . .

If visionary zealots can, by Federal law, control the birth, the rearing, and the governing of all children . . .

If the educational zealots can, by Federal law, control all education and eliminate the private and the church schools and colleges . . .

If the zealots in the arts and crafts and unions can, by Federal law, control the methods, the technique, and the volume of all production . . .

If every other group devoted to some moral or economic theory can force it on the people through pressure on our national legislature . . .

Then the republican form of government, under which the United States became great and its people free and happy, will be supplanted by a tyranny depriving citizens of liberty of mind, of body and of action.

Only when the system of pressure politics—from within or without—is finally destroyed, will the great body of unorganized, self-reliant American citizens, who constitute the backbone of our nation, come into its own.

For Dinner... $1.50 to Spend!

DO you remember when you were called upon to do mental arithmetic in school, and had to do the sums rapidly in your head? That's something like being confronted with the necessity of producing a good dinner for six people when you are down to your last dollar and a half.

Or perhaps, because the problem is so confusing it's more like the experience of Lewis Carroll's Alice with the Red and White Queens when she found her way through the Looking Glass:

"Can you do Addition?" the White Queen asked. "What's one and one and one and one and one and one and one and one and one?"

"I don't know," said Alice. "I lost count."

"She can't do Addition," the Red Queen interrupted. "Can you do Subtraction? Take nine from eight."

"Nine from eight I can't, you know," Alice replied very readily, "but—"

"She can't do Subtraction," said the White Queen. "Can you do Division? Divide a loaf by a knife — what's the answer to that?"

A Dietitian Knew the Answer

Yes, the problem is decidedly more like Alice's, and that is the reason why we asked a dietitian to suggest a good dinner that could be served for approximately a dollar and a half. Here's what she suggested, together with the approximate cost of the various dishes. Of course they wouldn't cost exactly the same in every city and town in the country, but they'd come pretty close.

Tomato Soup 14¢
Cold Cuts 50¢ Potato Salad 29¢
Buttered Summer Squash 12¢
Cracked Wheat Bread and Butter 12¢
Cherry Tapioca 25¢
Iced Tea with Lemon 8¢

And that adds up exactly to a dollar and a half whether you do it in your head or write it carefully down on a slate.

Here Are the Recipes

Of course you already know how to make most of these things, but here's the way to extend a can of tomato soup so that it will serve six people, and the recipe for the dessert.

Tomato Soup: Combine one can tomato soup, two cups water, half a chicken bouillon cube, salt and pepper, and bring to boiling. Add a pinch of soda. Pour this very slowly into one-fourth cup scalded cream, and serve at once.

Cherry Tapioca: For this recipe you use half of the fruit and all the syrup from a No. 2 can red pitted cherries. The remaining cherries can be used in a salad the next day.

Add one cup water to one cup cherry syrup, bring to boiling, add four tablespoons minute tapioca, place in double boiler and cook fifteen minutes, stirring often. Add two tablespoons sugar and a few grains salt and pour the mixture slowly into two beaten eggs. Return to double boiler and cook one minute longer. Add half the cherries from the can, turn into glass dishes and chill. Serve with top milk or thin cream.

Pattern 2240

No one has ever designed anything to equal the chic and comfort of the "Wrap-around" for efficient performance of household duties. And in our crowded lives today, efficiency plays an important part. Perhaps that's why a house frock that could "go to market" to prove its versatility has been conceived. Don't those big square buttons conform beautifully with the unique cut of the front?—and joys of joys, the wrap is deep enough to keep from popping out at the wrong time. Confidently, freedom isn't the only virtue of those sleeves—they're so easy to make.

Pattern 2240 is available in sizes 14, 16, 18, 20, 22, 24, 26, 28, 30, 32, 34, 36, 38, 40, 42 and 44. Size 16 takes 4 yards 36 inch fabric. Illustrated step-by-step sewing instructions included.

Send FIFTEEN CENTS (15c) in coins or stamps (coins preferred) for this pattern. Write plainly name, address and style number. BE SURE TO STATE SIZE.

Address orders to Sewing Circle Pattern Department 243 West Seventeenth street, New York.

WASHINGTON DIGEST

National Topics Interpreted

BY WILLIAM BRUCKART

NATIONAL PRESS BLDG.

WASHINGTON, D.C.

Washington.—One of the oldest and perhaps the most constant of all complaints about the federal government at Washington has been the tendency toward bureaucratic control. Bureaucratic control, simmered down, is red tape; it is attempted management of even personal affairs by a governmental agency and it is naturally and obviously repulsive to the average American. It was a condition thoroughly to be criticized in Mr. Hoover's administration when there were boards, bureaus, and commissions everywhere. It is even worse now, I believe, with all of the New Deal's alphabetic soup agencies scattered hither and yon in execution of various New Deal experiments and theories.

All of this constitutes a prelude to what appears to me to be a most flagrant attempt by bureaucrats to manage private affairs. I refer to an order issued the other day by the federal communications commission under which it has asserted a jurisdiction which I cannot believe congress ever intended it should have. Further, the asserted jurisdiction which the commission is seeking to exercise goes far beyond anything which might be made the basis of complaint solely because it is bureaucratic. It has reached into the field of commercial enterprise in a manner which, without a doubt, will have the effect of covering invention and experiment in industry with a destructive frost bite—if the commission is allowed to get away with it.

The facts involved are these: The American Telephone and Telegraph company, which is spending millions of dollars annually in scientific research to improve our system of communications such as the telephone, the telegraph, and the radio, lately has perfected what is technically known as the coaxial cable. This cable is revolutionary. It holds the possibility of transmission of 240 telephonic conversations simultaneously over a single pair of wires. It is not commercially complete in all of its phases. Like every organization of sound judgment, the A. T. & T. wants to iron out weaknesses and imperfections through a period of experimental operation.

As a courtesy, purely, the A. T. & T. submitted its plan for experimentation to the communications agency, saying as it did so that the commission did not have jurisdiction but that in the development of such a revolutionary invention the corporation was advising the commission of its plans and suggested that if the commission thought it had jurisdiction it could issue an experimental license covering the work. In all of this it is to be remembered that the communications commission has jurisdiction over rates, regulations, and practices of the wire, telephone and radio companies.

It seems that some bright young men in the communications commission immediately conceived the idea of having that group take jurisdiction when legal authorities tell me there is nothing in the law giving them that authority. The story I get around the commission lobbies is that the A. T. & T. would not have objected to having the commission exercise what it believed its right to be in granting a license for the experiment but when the order emerged from the secret chamber of the commission, it carried in it a provision which said that the commission could withdraw its approval and nullify the permission granted on 10 days' notice as it saw fit.

Suffice to say that this provision together with several other technical phases of the circumstances was enough to arouse the ire of the business men concerned. They are not only disgusted. They are downright sore. It is one of those things that politicians, undertrained in science, attempt to do that cause practical people to lose faith in their government.

Fight of Vital Interest

If it were simply a fight between the A. T. & T. and the commission that is involved, the situation would hold no interest at all for me as a Washington writer. But, as I said above, it goes much further. I am told that some officials of the A. T. & T. are so dissatisfied with the attitude of the commission in this instance that they are ready, even anxious, to withdraw their application and decline to proceed with this experiment which ultimately is going to mean enormous changes in telephonic and telegraphic contact between cities located great distances apart. The A. T. & T. engineers have been working on this problem some six or seven years. They proposed to build 100 miles of cable by connecting New York and Philadelphia. It had very little of the commercial in it. They wanted to try out transmission of television images for broadcast by radio. They wanted to perfect further the transmission of photographs by wire and they were desirous as well of determining whether they had discovered all of the potentialities of the new invention. All of the expenses—some six hundred thousand dollars—was to be paid from surplus funds of the corporation.

It takes no stretch of the imagination to realize that if the A. T. & T. backed away from the program it has laid out and refused to spend more money in perfecting its invention and declined to attempt to put it into commercial use for the benefit of the country as a whole, the country, that is you and I, would suffer. We would be denied advantages developed by science and made available virtually as a national benefit.

I do not know what the end will be. It is not at a stage wherein a forecast is possible. But the principle of the commission's action, whether it be put forward under Democratic or Republican administration, remains exactly the same. It should not be tolerated and if the communications commission persists in its efforts to expand its control, its usefulness certainly is at an end. Hitherto, the communications commission has had a very satisfactory relationship with business. I have heard dozens of executives from communications corporations say they were willing to forgive and generally overlook ignorance piled up in the commission by political appointments in several spots. They wanted to cooperate but it is the opinion of more than just myself among Washington observers that this sort of thing does not contribute to good government.

Duck hunters will have only 30 days for shooting this fall in accordance with the most rigid regulations in the history of American game hunting.

Now, as to Duck Hunting

This is the result of a determination by the federal government under an act of congress to give migratory wild fowl an opportunity to increase in numbers. In explaining the government's action which was made the subject of a proclamation by President Roosevelt, J. N. (Ding) Darling, chief of the biological survey and an internationally known cartoonist, declared that unless the shooting of ducks and other wild fowl is restricted it is only a question of time until none of them remain.

It is assumed that hunters will be interested first in the period during which they may shoot ducks, geese, brant, or jacksnipe. The season will open in northern states October 21 and will close November 19. In the southern states the season will run from November 20 to December 19.

For the information of hunters there is set out below the states included in the northern area where hunting may be done between October 21 and November 19:

Maine, New Hampshire, Vermont, Massachusetts, Rhode Island, Connecticut, New York, Pennsylvania, West Virginia, Ohio, Michigan, Indiana, Illinois, Wisconsin, Minnesota, Iowa, Missouri, North Dakota, South Dakota, Nebraska, Kansas, Montana, Wyoming, Colorado, Idaho, Utah, Washington, Oregon, and Nevada.

The southern states listed and in which hunting may occur from November to December 19 follow:

New Jersey, Delaware, Maryland, Virginia, North Carolina, South Carolina, Georgia, Florida, Alabama, Mississippi, Kentucky, Tennessee, Arkansas, Louisiana, Oklahoma, Texas, New Mexico, Arizona, and California.

Regulations issued by the biological survey, according to Mr. Darling, are based on the necessity of having a net annual increase of migratory birds left over at the end of each shooting season until the present depleted population of waterfowl is restored to something like normal. This year's rigid restrictions, he explained, follow a period of approximately thirty-five years during which the kill of wild fowl has exceeded the increase from breeding.

To give an idea of how thoroughly the wild fowl are to be protected, the new regulations prohibit shooting over what is known as baited water or land—that is, land or water on which feed has been scattered as an inducement for the birds to stop their flight. Another thing ruled out in this effort to protect the water fowl is the live decoy. This has always been the most effective method for luring wild fowl from the air. None will be allowed hereafter.

The regulations restrict shooting to the hours between 7 a. m. and 4 p. m., a course taken in order to permit birds in flight an opportunity to feed without being subjected to pot shots. Automatic and repeating shot guns will be restricted to a limit of three shells for their chambers and no shot guns larger than a No. 10 gauge will be permitted.

Mr. Darling who has gained a reputation as an enthusiast for game conservation, relinquished his work as a cartoonist in order to carry out his ideals. It has taken him some months to work out a program but he feels his efforts have been worth while.

ILLINOIS BREVITIES

Mrs. Henrietta Hammer, who celebrated her ninety-third birthday July 15, died in Rockford.

Governor Horner will address the twenty-fifth annual session of the Boys' State Fair school in Springfield, Monday, August 19.

Horace Critchfield, seventy-nine, member of the printing industry for 60 years and publisher of a group of central Illinois weekly newspapers, died in Atlanta.

John E. Sanders, thirty-six, machine operator on a new road being built at Coffeen, died of injuries suffered when run over by a truck hauling road material.

George F. Saunders, sixty-eight years old, organizer and president of the Fort Dearborn Manufacturing company, formerly of Chicago, died in Sterling after a long illness.

James P. McManus, forty-three, former city attorney of Toulon, master in chancery of Stark county and chairman of the Stark county Democratic central committee, died following a year's illness with cancer.

Henry Skelton, ninety-six, who had 90 descendants, died at Sheridan. He was an early day school teacher of LaSalle county, a veteran of the Civil war, and knew Abraham Lincoln personally.

Vivid and detailed description of Illinois' 10,000 acres of scenic, recreation and historic areas is contained in a new booklet entitled, "Illinois State Parks and Memorials," which is being distributed by the state department of public works and buildings.

Elmer Smith, thirty-one years old, a trusty at the Joliet penitentiary, was cutting weeds outside the old prison when his sickle struck a 50 cent piece. Smith turned the coin in to Warden Whipp who, when he was unable to find the loser, credited the coin to Smith's prison account.

Work was started on the construction of new buildings which are to house a record number of exhibits at the Cook county fair to be held from August 10 to 18 at the fair grounds, River road and North avenue. Ground was broken for the factory, farm and fireside hall, in which the Chicago Merchants' council will maintain industrial exhibits and a household and food show.

An automobile roared up the main street of Mount Prospect and with brakes screaming came to a halt in front of the Mount Prospect State bank. Three bandits brandishing guns jumped to the sidewalk and rushed to the door. It was locked. Baffled, they squinted at a small card in the door which read: "Out to lunch, back in half an hour—William Busse, cashier." The trio holstered their weapons, got back in their car and roared away.

Mrs. Nancy West, believed to have been the oldest white woman born in Kane county, died at St. Joseph Mercy hospital in Aurora after a long illness. She was ninety-two years old. Mrs. West was born in Sugar Grove, September 17, 1842, and had lived there all her life. Surviving are two daughters, Mrs. Carrie Phillips of Aurora, Mrs. Emma Waite of Sugar Grove; and three sons, Bruce of Hoquiam, Washington; Wallace of Aurora, and Earle of Sugar Grove.

The Illinois state tax commission urged local taxing officials throughout the state to assume the role of "law students" in the present period in order to clarify their own minds and those of the taxpayers on changes in tax laws made by the recent general assembly. The suggestion was made in connection with distribution to local officials by the tax commission of a digest and analysis of 24 important revisions in tax laws that concern downstate counties.

Definite approval of $100,000,000 program of works relief projects for the city, parks, and schools of Chicago was announced by Mayor Kelly. The announcement followed a conference between the mayor, Harry Hopkins, national works progress administrator, and Robert J. Dunham, state director of the WPA. The mayor said he hoped to have work started on the street resurfacing project within six weeks and to have the other improvements under way shortly thereafter, giving jobs to 65,000 persons.

The burned bodies of a truck driver, identified as James Scanlon, twenty-five years old, and that of his helper, Joseph Krojci, twenty-eight, both of Chicago, were found in a truck which had broken into flames after it had suddenly swerved from state highway No. 5 a mile west of Bartlett. Otto Brennemann, who farms near the scene of the accident, told state highway police of Egin that he heard the crash and the screams of the two men imprisoned in the cab of the flaming truck. Telephoning to the Bartlett fire department and the police, he went to the assistance of the victims. The heat of the fire was so intense, however, he said, that he could not approach to attempt a rescue.

Six families escaped when a resort apartment building on the south side of Channel lake, 2½ miles west of Antioch in Lake county, went up in flames. The building, formerly a dance pavilion, was a landmark of the neighborhood.

Thousands of fish in the Illinois river were killed as a result of the $2,750,000 Hiram Walker distillery fire in Peoria. With the water saturated by the alcoholic drain from the fire ruins, bridge tenders along the Illinois declare they have been inhaling the aroma of whisky and mash ever since.

Log Cabin Effect in Crocheted Rug

By GRANDMOTHER CLARK

Log cabins are always picturesque, and the many antiques usually found about the place add much to complete the picture.

We can't all live in cabins, but we can satisfy our antique cravings by giving these ideas some space in our homes.

This "Log Cabin" crocheted rug was developed from the old "Log Cabin" quilt which is known to many of our readers. This model measures 28x42 inches and requires about four pounds of rag rug material.

The inner square of 4 triangles is made first. Four elongated pieces of same size form the first row around center, two short and two long pieces form the next or second row. Four pieces of same size from the third row. Four same size triangles fit in corners. Slip-stitch sections together in black and single crochet all around in black. Color scheme may be all brown in light and dark shades or mixed colors. Alternate panels in light and dark shades to give contrast to rows. Measure each section as the work progresses and fit sections into spaces. Rag rug material may vary in weights.

Grandmother Clark's Rug Book No. 24 contains full directions for making this rug, and many others that will interest you. All illustrations in colors. Postpaid, 15c.

Trees and Rainfall

There is much controversy over the question whether trees and other heavy vegetation bring rain or not. A great number of forcible points are cited both for and against this question. But we cannot help noting with interest a report from the Soviet government. In Russia a considerable area was planted with trees in 56 foot strips 700 feet apart. Rainfall in the area of these strips was carefully checked against rainfall in surrounding untreed areas. The results were astonishing. The increase in rainfall in the area bordered by the forest strips was from 18 per cent to 27.2 per cent. In the treed areas the evaporation between the strips was from 20 to 35 per cent less than in the open.
